HERITAGE SIGNIFICANCE

This stone wall is a good example of an early, common form of boundary fencing. The wall was built from local stone, said to have been constructed by Thomas and Anna Standish and family for the landowners. The wall marks the original boundary of the properties "Baldon" and "Grieveston". It was built between 1874 and 1875 and extends about 11 kilometres in length.

Repairing Dry Stone Walls

Dry stone walls are found in several locations of the South Australian countryside. As the name implies they are constructed without any mortar.

Stone was readily available in South Australia and with dry stone walling techniques available from emigrant Irish, Welsh and English people these fences soon featured in the nineteenth century landscape. Using stone was also a useful way of clearing the field of stones. Some of these walls still remain and are a reminder of a traditional skill that is in danger of being lost.

Dry stone walls vary according to local conditions and the type of stone available. Generally however, they all consist of two sides tapering toward the top with the cavity between filled with small stones, and importantly, through stones at regular intervals to tie the sides together.

At the top of the wall the cope stones have two functions apart from their decorative effect. Firstly their weight adds stability to the lighter stones in the upper half of the wall, and secondly they act as through stones tying the sides together at the top.

Damage to the wall is usually a result of the cope stones being dislodged and if not repositioned, the unrestrained lower stones gradually fall away.

As a teaching exercise and to promote interest in dry stone walls a group of volunteers recently spent a day repairing a section of a wall at Baldon Station near Truro. This was achieved under the guidance of David Bulman, a Work Supervisor for the Lake District National Park in England, who was in South Australia as part of a staff exchange program. On the day David was assisted by his wife Carol. Both grew up in the Lake District where the building and maintenance of dry stone walls is part of farm life. Their expertise was invaluable as volunteers sought to put together what was literally a large jigsaw puzzle.

The stone wall at Baldon Station was constructed between 1874 and 1875, and was built from local stone. It is said to have been constructed by Thomas and Anne Standish and family for the landowners. The wall marked the original boundary of Baldon Station and neighbouring Grieveston, and extended about 11 kilometres in length.

The first part of repairing the wall was to remove the stones from that part of the fence which was in disrepair. Loose and collapsed stones were removed down to a firm footing. It was sometimes necessary to re-lay the foundation stones where the wall had been undermined. Thereafter the wall was rebuilt from both sides ensuring that the profile matched the existing wall and that two sides of the wall were built up together. The photographs show how much of the wall was completed in one day. Although only a small section of the wall was repaired the exercise demonstrates that given the appropriate guidance a traditional skill can be easily learnt.

REGIONAL HERITAGE SURVEY PROGRAM - AN UPDATE

Since the last update on the Regional Heritage Survey Program in the July 1997 edition of the State Heritage Newsletter, the two regional heritage surveys (Yorke Peninsula and Murray Mallee) are now nearing completion and the two Metropolitan Adelaide heritage surveys (Cities of Payneham and West Torrens) are still in progress, with completion dates in the first half of 1998.

The draft report of the heritage survey of the Yorke Peninsula region, consisting of three Council areas (District Council of Barunga West, Copper Coast and Yorke Peninsula), has nominated 15 additional places for consideration as entries in the State Heritage Register as well as 400 local heritage places. The places nominated as being of State heritage significance include the graves of the seamen of the Clan Ranald at Edithburgh Cemetery, Bald Hill between Kadina and Moonta, dry stone walling in the Hundred of Melville and the Port Julia Jetty and Grain Shed. The Yorke Peninsula Survey has recommended four areas in the townships of Kadina, Moonta and Wallaroo and Wallaroo Mines as being worthy of designation as Historic Conservation Zones (local heritage areas) by the District Council of the Copper Coast.

The heritage survey of the Murray Mallee region is proposing to recommend about five or six new places for entry in the Register, together with 50-60 local heritage places. The proposed State heritage places include a Catholic Church of unusual design and construction and a corrugated iron villa, both located in the township of Lamerloo.

The City of Payneham Heritage Survey, which is in preliminary draft form, has nominated four additional places for the State Heritage Register, including St Aidan's Anglican Church, Marden, as well as 48 places of local heritage significance. In addition the survey also identified four potential Historic
