'The Customs Office situated near the gates to railway goods sheds was originally used as a check point for goods coming off the jetty by rail, which were subject to customs. It operated in this capacity till Federation (1901) when it was used as a railway office for a time. Subsequently it was used as an overnight camp for rail inspectors until the closure of the line. It was saved from the bulldozer largely through the efforts of Mr. Tom McCourt who was also instrumental in restoring it. It is presently used as an office for the A.N.Z. Bank.' (J. Berger).

Description:

Central section was the former railway station and included the waiting room and Station Master's residence. The waiting room and residence are weatherboard and have a metal tiled roof, which replaced a corrugated galvanized iron roof. The residence has an M-shaped gable end with louvered ventilators. Modern additions adjoin the northern and southern ends. The waiting room has a dressed stone chimney. The bowling club has retained the original station lamps and these are placed each side of the entrance to the former waiting room section of the building.

The Beachport - Mount Gambier railway opened in 1879, to unite with the harbour facilities to make the town a major distribution centre. Beachport never boomed quite as expected, and with the disappearance of the railway, the Station building has found an unusual use.

Description:

The Beachport Jetty was designed to be 4,000 feet (1,220 metres) in length with a 'T' head 122 feet (37.20 m.) long and 18 feet (5.50 m.) wide. Work began on the jetty early in 1878, however the Engineer of Harbours and Jetties suspended the work due to the contractors, Wells Bros., erecting the jetty out of level and line. The contractors blamed these discrepancies on the plans that were supplied by the Government Architect and lodged a compensation claim for extra materials and additional work. Following a Royal Commission, headed by Sir Henry Ayers, it was found that the discrepancies were due to miscalculations on the part of Wells Bros. Their contract was revoked and the Government undertook to complete the jetty. The work resumed in May, 1879 and after changes and delays was finally completed in 1882. The 'T' section and a section of the jetty was removed some years later and the present jetty is only 2,536 feet (733 metres) long. In 1974-75 there was a Government proposal to demolish the outer section of the jetty, as it was considered unsafe. This did not eventuate due to a public outcry.

Description:

Complex of three buildings and a well. Random rubble stonework with timber above remaining openings. One building still retains a corrugated galvanized iron hipped roof and stone chimney. Another building has part of its wall cement rendered.

The Kangaroo Inn was built in the 1840's 'near the junction of the Robe to Penola road and the original overland track' (J.M. Berger). The inn never had a licence, but still traded in alcohol. The trade was good during the drainage operations of the 1860's and 1870's, however it declined when a new road had linked Beachport with the Robe to Penola road and the Kintore Inn appeared at Furner. The Kangaroo Inn closed in 1886. An alternative account has the Kangaroo Inn operating from 1861-75, begun by John McDonald and passing through the hands of Aaron Lane, John McIntyre and J.T. White.

Random coursed sandstone with tuck-pointing and quoins on front facade. Corrugated galvanized hipped roof and hipped verandahs along front elevation. Raised verandah level. Symmetrical front elevation with stone walls on either end linking main house to outbuildings. Arched openings in linking walls, right hand arch has 'A J 1864' inscribed above it. The outbuildings on the left hand of the main house were the men's quarters; schoolroom; and buggy room, whilst to the right hand were the kitchen; maids' quarters; and butchers' room. These later rooms were burnt at some stage and the remaining stone was used to build a shearing shed. Behind the house are the remaining walls of the stables, which were extensively burnt on Ash Wednesday, 1983. These walls have some volcanic stones in their structure and keystones or stone arches above openings.

Homestead built when Archibald Johnson transferred to this spot the headquarters of his "Lake George", "Woakwine South" and "Mount Muirhead" runs. Had many distinguished guests because on the Robe-Mount Gambier coach route. Sold in 1872 to John McInnes of "Crower", then in 1875 to Thomas Guthrie, and early this century to the Williams family.

The Kintore Inn was erected to take advantage of the traffic on the road linking Beachport with the Robe-Penola road. The inn provided a superior class of accommodation than some of the older inns, but with the advent of better roads and faster travel, it became redundant earlier this century and was taken over as a general store, before being abandoned.

Access to the Beachport Conservation Park is by a track which follows the the old coach road between Beachport and Robe. The site of the Smith and Stewart's changing stables (c.1879-1907) is situated within the park. Nearly 50% of the park is covered by mobile sand dunes and the rest consists of variable scrubland. Two Lakes, a freshwater lake, occurs as the result of freshwater seepages with the sand dunes. The park contains a variety of habitats and supports about 200 species of birds, including Grey Plovers, Mongolian Sand Dotterels, Greenshanks and Bar-tailed Godwits. The infestation of rabbits, early grazing, past burning and fence construction has resulted in the large area of mobile sand dunes. Aboriginal middens, especially at Three Mile Rocks, are important elements of the park's environment.
