RECOMMENDATION: State

Description:

Large house of random coursed stone with dressed stone quoins to corners and doorways with panelled doors surrounded by sidelights and fanlights. Many flat-roofed bay windows with single-paned sash windows. Corbelled chimneys to hipped corrugated iron roof.

Built for an English gentleman, George Affleck, who took the name of Danby in order to obtain an estate. This was his third fortune, and his improvidence may account for a planned second floor never having been added to "Lakeside". Danby imported English craftsmen for the building, which was modelled on an Affleck mansion in England.

Description:

Remnants of stone walls with corbelled parapet wall.

Built largely by local masons such as George Hailes, Levi Cooper and Sandy Park. Noted for its ornamental features. Served as a gaol until 1881 when prisoners were transferred to Mount Gambier. Much of the structure was torn down for road metal. 'Originally intended to serve the whole of the Lower South East it became redundant as the inland population grew and the ports declined.' (A. Barrowman).

Description:

Two storey gable roofed building with projecting hipped roof hexagonal bays. Random coursed rubble walls with segmental arched four-paned sash windows at ground level, shallow pointed arch window above, fanlight and sidelights to central door. String course at mid-height, gable vents either side of chimney, corbelled eaves. Timber clad upper level lean-to between projecting bays. Various single storey gabled and mono-pitched additions.

Built as the summer residence of Henry Jones of "Binnum", but he lost it because of his financial improvidence. Governor Sir James Fergusson used it as a summer residence c.1870. Later occupants were H. Dutton of "Anlaby", George Riddoch of "Koorine", and his grand-daughter Adelaide Napier.

Description:

Simple gabled roof structure of rendered stone with pointed arch windows and entrance door, with fanlight above. Smaller gabled schoolroom extension at rear with stone chimney. Renewed pressed metal tiled roof.

The first religious structure in Robe. The stone was quarried at "Richmond Park". Had a chimney because the church doubled as a school from 1866 to 1880, the sisters being of the Order of St. Joseph.

Description:

Pair of attached hipped roof buildings of coursed rubble with segmental stone arches over six-paned casement windows, and regularly spaced doors with three-paned fanlights over. Street facades have been partially repaired, but the rear of the building is in a very dilapidated state.

Known as the 'Bush Inn' in 1862, then 'Mac's Hotel' in 1863. The licensee of 1865 was George Kendle from "Murrabinna", who built "Dingley Dell". After being unlicensed for many years it became the home of the Berminghams, and Robe's premier historian spent her childhood there.

Description:

Pyramidal-shaped landmark of rendered stone with plinth at base. Painted in red, orange and white bands. Timber lintel over tapered doorway to storeroom inside.

The Harbour Master, Capt. Thomas Lipson, suggested an obelisk for the Cape. The contractor who eventually built it was the third, two earlier contractors having apparently been deterred by the difficulty of the site. It was painted in alternate red and white bands in 1862 to make it more visible. At one time rocket equipment was stored in it as a life-saving measure. An unfounded legend has it used as a place of solitary confinement for the prisoners of the Robe Gaol.

Description:

Simple L-shaped building comprising attached cottages. White painted rendered stone walls with double five-paned casement windows to Smillie Street elevation, four-paned sash windows to Cooper Street elevation, arched doorways. Hipped roof of flat iron with rolled laps, stone chimneys protruding from ridges.

Although called the 'Old Barracks' they were never so used; confusion resulted from the real barracks having been nearby, and from the appearance of the Ormerod Cottages. 'The four cottages, forming a terrace, were built to house the necessary personnel of a young and growing town, the activity of which was centred around the Shipping House of Ormerod & Co.' (K. Bermingham). Early occupants included a lawyer, a doctor, an accountant, a school teacher and a gaoler; later occupants were the staff of Sir James Fergusson when he stayed at "Karatta".

Description:

Large gabled residence of random coursed rubble, solid stone flat arches to multi-paned casement windows, scalloped gable barge and verandah fascia, raked verandah roof.

Built for the merchant George Ormerod. Sold in 1872, with the shipping business, to the John Grices. Transferred with this firm to Hutchison and Dunn. Andrew Dunn lived there till his death in 1901, after the collapse of the family fortune. Miss Alexandrina Hutchison later bequeathed it to the Church of England, who used it as a rectory. Returned to private ownership in 1939.

Description:

Simple stuccoed building of large proportions with decorated surrounds to single and four-paned sash windows. Keystones to segmental arches over windows and panelled door with fanlight over. String course at mid-window height and moulded cornice near top of parapet wall which conceals hipped roof. New additions in similar style virtually indistinguishable from original building.

A Mechanics' Institute was formed in 1862, using the Presbyterian Chapel Room. For an Institute building the Government granted part of the "Village Green". 'A special feature of the building was the use of Morewood's Iron on the roof, which was suggested by the contractors, Messrs. Savage and Kerr' (K. Bermingham). The most recent extension was in 1983. The Oddfellows Lodge used the "West Room" for many years, and the Institute has always maintained a library.

Description:

Corrugated galvanized iron hipped roof continuous with hipped main roof. Rubble walls with brick quoins to six-paned sash windows and doors with three-paned skylight over. Part parapet wall frontage, rendered without quoins. Timber tracery to verandah structure. Group of small older buildings to the rear, of rubble walls with three-paned casement windows and timber lattice to gable.

The larger room was built for George Ormerod 'to accommodate wool salvaged from the wreck of the "Duilius" in 1853' (National Trust). Later owners included D. Grosse, who made it "London House", a millinery and dressmaking establishment, Robert Affleck, and the Savage family. It was the last home of Kathleen Bermingham, historian of Robe.

Description:

Steeply gabled building of rendered stone with brick quoins to pointed arch leadlight glass windows, buttresses and parapet walls. Square bell tower to one side with pointed arch windows. Back side of church has pilasters substituting stepped buttresses and less brick trim.

The Presbyterian Chapel was being used by all Protestant denominations, and it was in a similar spirit of co-operation that subscriptions were volunteered for the Anglican Church. Capt. Brewer, the Govt. Resident, laid the foundation stone. Other notable persons associated with the Church include George Ormerod, for whom memorial windows were added in 1872, and the Lea family of "The Hermitage" who donated a chancel in 1914. The Bell Tower dates from 1896, when a mason was Levi Copper.

Description:

Group of cottages. A well maintained collection of three main buildings enclosed by extensive stone walls.

Main building has hipped roof of random rubble with two end wings projecting under front verandah. Shutters to three-paned casement windows and six-paned sash windows. Paired verandah posts, supporting raked verandah roof continuous with main roof. Massive stone chimneys. Other smaller buildings of similar construction with some French doors.

In 1864 Edward Stockdale sold the eastern part of his "Lake Hawdon" property, and named the western part "Richmond Park". He spent a lot of money on it at a time when his interest had transferred from horses to sheep. Hutchison and Dunn rented the property in the 1870's. Donald MacLeod managed it for the Feuerheerd Bros. early this century.

Description:

Double gabled building with lower pitched verandah semi-enclosed with diagonal timber lattice work and four-paned casement windows, gabled entrance to verandah. Older gabled section to rear with flat iron roof with rolled laps, partly replaced with corrugated iron.

The oldest part of this building was allegedly the second house built in Robe Town, for use by Government personnel. It was enlarged in 1853 by Henry Smith, and known as 'Crazy Cottage' - 'on account of its long sagging roof and having been built in two portions' (K. Bermingham). George Ormerod occupied it while building 'Moorakyne' (1856). A later owner was Arthur Banks, a teamster, and his wife the popular 'Granny Banks'.

Squared struck random rubble cottage with raked corrugated iron verandah, continuous with main roof, very low verandah and lean-to at rear. Paired three-paned casement windows. Separate kitchen building of random rubble with sash and casement windows, panelled doors.

Robert Jackson, a well known drover, came with his family to the Robe area in 1866. After living nearby, at a spot now marked by almond trees, they built "Wyverstone Park", named after a family home in England. The Jacksons built the house themselves, and a photograph of c.1888 shows that it must have had additions to both sides after that time.

The first lease-owner of "Bagdad", in the 1840's, was George William Hayes from Van Dieman's Land. He married Margaret, daughter of Mrs. Hutchison of "Woolmit". The main homestead would seem to have been built in two stages; '1879' is scratched on a window of the second part. Built of Mount Benson stone.

Tuck-pointed random rubble cottage with stone lean-to at one side, corrugated iron lean-to at other side. Six-paned sash windows to front wall (covered with sheet iron), panelled central door with three-paned fanlight above, keystones over flat-arched doors and windows. Brick chimney to one end of hipped corrugated iron roof.

Built for George Kendle, "Dingley Dell" became in 1865 the residence of the celebrated Alexander Tolmer, when he had fallen on hard times and become Crown Lands Ranger of the Guichen Bay District. The house itself was later absorbed into the Dawson property of "Bellevue", and from 1935 was used in the C.S.I.R.O. experiments on trace elements. Although humbled to a storage shed, "Dingley Dell" by its contribution to those epoch making experiments, gained a new kind of eminence.

Built for Charles Smith, a licensee of the Robe Hotel. Named "Bellevue Villa" by later owners, the Magareys. In 1935, when owned by Robert Dawson, "Bellevue" became, with the adjacent "Dingley Dell", a C.S.I.R.O. Field Station for the investigation of 'Coast Disease' which had bedevilled pastoralists since the first white settlement. There was a similar station on Kangaroo Island. The disease was found to be preventable by the administration of minute quantities of copper and cobalt. Pastures, too, benefitted from research into soil deficiencies.

Description:

Large collection of buildings built in various stages, some attached, some separate. Main house is wide hipped roof building of tuck-pointed square rubble walls, with dressed stone quoins to French doors to elevated front verandah with timber balustrade, bay window at one end. Rear kitchen building has one facade renewed with Mount Gambier limestone and aluminium windows. Separate servants' quarters built in several stages of painted rendered random rubble with raked verandah roof, continuous with main gabled roof. No windows to front; three-paned sash windows at rear.

George Lord, one of Robe's earliest and most prominent settlers, bought this property in 1855, and would seem to have built the central part of the house, with the first part of the servants' quarters. Later the property came into the hands of Dr. Edward Lea, of Lea and Perrins, and additions were made to the house in 1868 or thereafter by William Savage. Dr. Lea changed the name from "Lake Robe" to "The Hermitage". The Lea family held "The Hermitage" for 99 years, making it a showplace at first then allowing it to decline. Currently under restoration.

This Conservation Park is situated south of Robe between the sea and Lake Robe and Lake Eliza. It is basically a large system of sand dunes and limestone rises with sandy beaches occurring at intervals between Errington Hole and Cape Lannes. The vegetation of the park consists of Cushion Bush and Spear Grass on the rises and a heathland of Beyeria leschenaulti, Thyme Rice Flower (Pimelea serpyllifolia), and Goodenia varia on the more sheltered parts. The sand dune system is either unvegetated or has a covering of dense scrubland, including Coastal Wattle, Golden Wattle (Acacia pycnantha) and Currant Bush. Within the park there are a series of lakes, some with brackish water and others with fresh water and supporting a fine water-bird population. The park is ideal for holiday recreation and a number of shacks exist at the end of Little Dip Road.

Description:

Edward Stockdale, after ten years of pastoralism in Victoria and Van Dieman's Land, established "Lake Hawdon" in 1848. As well as cattle, he bred horses, at which he had great success, selling in Australia and India. Famous rough riders also gathered at the station, including Tommy Hales and Adam Lindsay Gordon. In 1864, having been discouraged by failed horsebreeding experiments, Stockdale had turned his attention to sheep, and he sold this eastern part of "Lake Hawdon" to Thomas Magarey.
